MEDICINAL.

THEY CAN'T ESCAPE.

The liver when active is the watch-dog of the system—the destroyer of germs and impurities. The truth is: ninety-nine out of every hundred diseases begin with a sluggish liver. A slight cold or chill may amount to something serious. If you cannot cure the liver, you will cure the cold. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets purge the liver to vigorous action. After dinner, if you're bilious, take one of these tiny, sugar-coated pills. Take them when you have wind or pain in stomach, giddiness, fullness, loss of appetite, or when you suffer from constipation, indigestion, sick headaches.

The makers take the risk of benefiting you. If it does not satisfy you, your money is refunded. Can you ask more?

DENTISTRY.

ERYBEST

Is it wise?

Is it wise to dismiss an uninvestigated statement by saying, "It isn't possible?" Is it?

Pearls scattered at Fulton, launched at Morse, polished at Estlin. They think that good dentistry is necessarily high-priced, but the modernist is here, the telegraph and the phonograph, so is "scientific dentistry at moderate prices."

Why the Quaker Bought a Horse.

The winter of 1732 was very cold. The pavements became very slippery by the frost, and did not present any hold for the horses' feet, and one of these animals, harnessed to a large cart heavily laden with wool, was utterly unable to advance a step forward, while the carter, a powerful fellow, was laboring the poor brute with his heavy whip, striking him over the head with relentless ferocity. Breathless, and struggling violently, the poor horse was so exhausted by his continued and severe efforts, that, in spite of the cold, he was covered with sweat and foam. Now, throwing himself into his collar with desperate exertion, he tugged so that the stones beneath his feet threw out sparks of fire; now, far from being discouraged, he backed a few paces to take breath, and again tried, but in vain, to draw his load. Twice did he nearly fall, his knees touched the pavement; the carter raised him by the bit, leaving the mouth of the animal raw and bleeding. A third time, after a violent effort, he fell on his knees, one leg entangled beneath him; he could not recover himself, but fell on his side, where he lay trembling, bathed in sweat, and his eyes fixed on his brutal owner. The rage of his master then knew no bounds; and after breaking his whip over the head of the horse, who, kept down by the shafts, lay groaning on the stones, he began kicking the animal on the nostrils. The spectators of this cruel sight looked on with sympathy. The fellow, finding the horse did not move, took a bundle of straw, twisted it in the form of a torch, and taking a match from his pocket, said, "I'll roast him; 'p'raps that'll make him get up." At this moment a Quaker stopped, and pushed his way among the crowd. When he saw the carter go toward the fallen horse, with the intention of applying the blazing straw to his body, a shudder ran through his frame, and his countenance expressed the utmost compassion. Unable to endure this scene, the Quaker approached the carter and took him by the arm, who turned with a menacing look, as he shook the torch. "Friend," said the Quaker in a calm tone, showing the carter fifteen pounds or which he held in his hand, "what do you say to this?" "What do you say?" inquired the carter, "will you give me that sum for my horse?" "Fifteen pounds," said the Quaker. "But why should you buy the horse?" "That is nothing to thee. If thou wilt buy this horse, thou must allow me to unharass the horse and assist him to rise. 'Tis the gold good!" "Take it," said the Quaker, and he took the money and the horse. "The carter then returned, saying, 'It is a bargain.' Then unshackled the poor horse, for he is crushed by the weight of his burden. The bystanders lent their aid to free the horse. The poor animal was bleated in many places, and such was his terror of the carter, that he trembled at his approach. "But I cannot tell you how bought the old brute," said the carter. "I can tell thee it was to free him from the cruelty that I bought him," replied the Quaker. —Hammer
